PROJECT UPDATE: Green Seal Residential Cleaning Service Proposed Standard Open for Public Comment - Extended Until October 31

Thank you for your continued interest in Green Seal's development of an environmental standard for Residential Cleaning Services. To allow for more time for reviewing and commenting on the proposed standard, Green Seal is extending the comment period to Friday, October 31 2008.

The proposed standard, the background document, and additional information on this project can be found at the project web site:

http://greenseal.org/certification/gs49\_residential\_cleaning.cfm

The public review process is a key step to involve all stakeholders in the development of this standard. Green Seal welcomes comment from all interested parties and welcomes any interested party to join as a stakeholder during this extended time. Green Seal is soliciting comments on the proposed standard from the diverse stakeholders, including producers, users, and general interest groups. For public review of its standards, Green Seal considers each written comment, conducts follow-up research as needed, and modifies the proposed standard accordingly, with a written response to the comment or group of comments on the issue. In Green Seal's experience, the process of commenting, discussing issues, and resolving issues is most critical for the success of a standard. Green Seal, therefore, encourages all interested parties to provide substantive comments on the proposed standard.

Comments will be submitted through an online forum system until October 31, 2008. To post comments on the on-line forum, one must register to use the forum. All users will be able to view all comments and the username of the commenter. Forum registration is open to all interested parties until the deadline. To register as a user and access the forum:
